Swiss-Based Clean Energy Storage Technology Company with ARR Potential

A Swiss-based clean energy technology company is seeking strategic investors or industrial partners to accelerate its European and international expansion.

The company has developed a proprietary technology platform combining certified energy storage products, industrial processes and software-driven operations.

Significant R&D investments and public innovation funding have helped de-risk the technology, product architecture and deployment model.

The business introduces a differentiated recurring revenue model in the battery storage sector, creating long-term revenues beyond one-time equipment sales. Based on current market dynamics, the company sees a realistic medium-term ARR potential of CHF 10-15M in Europe, with a global opportunity exceeding CHF 100M ARR over time.

The product is already certified, commercially available and being deployed in Switzerland. Expansion discussions are ongoing with advanced discussions involving local partners in Europe, particularly France, as well as in Asia (Japan).

The company addresses fast-growing demand for distributed energy storage, energy resilience and circular industrial solutions. Its approach enables a significantly lower environmental footprint, with an estimated CO₂ reduction of up to 80% compared with conventional alternatives. The company also offers an opportunity to strengthen a Swiss industrial footprint in a strategic energy technology segment.

The project has received support from public funding bodies due to its sustainability, innovation and industrial relevance.
