Full-Cycle Water Factory with Maximum Automated process

Drinking water is produced with a reverse osmosis (RO) filtration system, a filtration system using a special membrane. Also known as Membrane, which is made from synthetic cellulose fibers with a resolution of 0.0001 microns, which is smaller than a hair. With this property, it makes the solution of contaminants such as heavy metals, chemical fertilizers, pesticides, lead and various pathogens which is larger an not penetrate through this filter membrane. Only pure strands can penetrate.

Contaminants trapped in the filter media are immediately removed from the system to prevent buildup inside the unit by separating them from the pure filtered water. This method makes RO water filtered.
