130-Years-Old Soccer Club League of Ireland First Division

The Soccer Ireland First Division, known as the second tier of the Republic of Ireland's football league system, plays a pivotal role in the country's sporting landscape. Established in 1985, the division serves as a crucial platform for clubs aspiring to reach the Premier Division, which is the highest level of professional football in Ireland.

The league typically consists of ten to twelve teams competing annually, with each club striving not only for victory in matches but also for promotion to the top tier. The season usually runs from March to October, featuring a home-and-away format where teams accumulate points to secure their place in the league standings. The top two sides at the end of the season earn promotion to the Premier Division, while the bottom teams may face relegation to the lower leagues.
